Angela Newman

Founder and CEO of Pink Ladders, LLC

Angela Newman is an entrepreneur who founded Pink Ladders, LLC in 2008 and launched the Pink Ladders Task Manager in 2009. In addition to running her own business, Newman currently holds the position of Vice President of Supply Chain for the third largest for-profit dialysis company in the U.S. She is a strong proponent of supporting charitable organizations with time and money which explains her role as the Board Chair for Nashville RBI (reviving baseball in the inner cities).

Newman's career began as a part time materials coordinator for a healthcare company while raising three children and attending nursing school. She soon found herself asking her boss for additional responsibilities which she was given because of her talent to manage multiple tasks successfully. During this time she decided to pursue an undergraduate degree in Business Administration instead of continuing with her nursing degree.

She quickly began climbing her career ladders in management positions within the healthcare industry with a focus on supply chain and held positions with companies such as FHP, Iasis Healthcare and Phycor before deciding to go back to school for her Masters in Business Administration. Newman continued to pursue her career path in business management with a focus in the dialysis industry for the last seven years at National Nephrology Associates and now at Renal Advantage Inc in Brentwood, Tennessee.

Newman, given her background of personal challenges, did not let that stand in her way of pursuing her passions or goals but rather worked harder to achieve the success she has today. And because she knows personally that regardless of how one's personal life was as a child or is as an adult, if you want to reach higher, achieve more and live a fulfilled happy life – you can do it with hard work, drive, and dedication.

Her passion and desire to share that message with women around the world is why she developed a website to inspire and encourage women from all walks of life to achieve their goals. The website not only tells Newman's story of climbing her pink ladder, but other women submit their stories of challenges and success for others to be inspired from. The passion she has to help women to be successful in their endeavors didn't stop there. In 2009, Newman launched the Pink Ladders Task Manager® to help women be productive in their lives and more valuable to their businesses and organizations. She continues to bring value to so many women through her website and Task Manager, including her support in the community.

All of this has been accomplished while being a wife, a mother and a grandmother. Angela is an inspiration to all women who want to start a career or are on the rungs of climbing their ladder.
